ABSTRACT: More and more travel agencies, airlines and hotels are launching travel-related World Wide Web sites to allow customers to make on-line bookings on the Internet. Travelers can make airline, hotels and car reservations through World Wide Web sites. World Wide Web sites provide a wide variety of travel information to Internet users and help them plan rewarding vacations.

TEXT:

NEW YORK -- The explosion of the World Wide Web has led to an industrywide push to make connections with consumers through the Internet.

With more than 2,000 travel-related Web sites, the list below just scratches the surface, but these are the firms shaping the future of selling travel.

Knowing the good book

Several companies have begun offering on-line bookings from the comfort of consumers' PCs.

Although on-line bookings aren't through the roof yet, most agree they will account for a chunk of tomorrow's travel pie. They include:

* American Express Travel. Amexco lets Web browsers make airline reservations on the Internet. A real-time reservations system allows users to complete bookings on line, as long as their credit card checks out. Tickets arrive via Federal Express in three business days. <http://www.americanexpress.com>

* Destination Florida. From the history of St. Augustine to the beauty of the Keys to the magic of Disney, this Web site offers Internet users everything they would need, including special deals, weather reports and things to do and see on a vacation in the Sunshine State -- including reservations.

<http://www.goflorida.com>

* Electronic Travel Auction. Although just launched in its beta-test phase, ETA is the first real-time travel-auction marketplace on the Internet. Suppliers can offer last-minute deals, and consumers can purchase them on the Web.

<http://www.etauction.com>

* Expedia. Microsoft's online accredited travel agency has caused quite a stir since its launch six weeks ago.

Users can access destination information and a hotel directory and subscribe to Fare Tracker, a service that E-mails users the lowest available air fares between any two cities in the world.

http://expedia.msn.com

* Internet Travel Network. Net users can make air, car and hotel reservations through this Web site, then pick up the tickets at one of ITN's 12,000 participating travel agencies.

ITN displays information directly from commercial airline reservation systems. Travel plans are confirmed with a fax.

<http://www.itn.net>

* PCTravel. The first travel agency to accept bookings on line is again breaking new ground by offering a more secure environment.

Now, Web browsers can call or fax their credit card information off line in order to make a booking on line.

According to PCTravel, online bookings are on the rise.

<http://www.pctravel.com>

* Preview Travel. As the travel provider for America Online subscribers, Preview Travel's vacations.com allows travelers to check out the hottest destination information, reservations.com enables browsers to book air fares and car rentals.

Best Fare Finder hunts down the cheapest flight itinerary for travelers.

* The Trip.com. The small-business traveler is the target of this company's Web site.

Clients can plan a trip; make airline, hotel and car reservations; access travel guides, and pinpoint flights in midair to check their status.

Repeat browsers have the advantage of having individualized travel preferences stored from an earlier kip.

<http://www.thetrip.com>

* Travelocity. The joint Web effort of Sabre Interactive and Worldview Systems offers a comprehensive site for Web browsers.

Travelocity includes chat rooms and forums, travel merchandise, air reservations and guidebook-style destination information provided by Worldview.

http://www.travelocity.com

* TravelWeb. TravelWeb takes on-line reservations for about 6,000 properties worldwide and offers a weekly hotel discount program as well.

TravelWeb claims surfers can catch the lowest published rates for hotel rooms and make reservations in just three clicks.

http://www.travelweb.com

* Travel Wiz has information on more than 80 hotel chains and 20 car rental companies. Links include worldwide weather information travel guides, tips for saving money and virtual-reality cruise-ship tours. Real-time hotel reservations can be confirmed right on line.

http://www.travelwiz.com

* Uniglobe Travel Online. Uniglobe Travel Online's 1,140 locations make it quite an expansive operation. The site offers full tour packages, cruises and airline tickets, but it differs from other services in that it encourages on-line users to call a toll free number to speak to a live agent who will help them book.

<http://www.uniglobe.com>

A room with a view

Most hotels have a site on the World Wide Web, but only a few have taken the next step to allow compu-consumers to book a room from their room at home. Best Western, Hilton and Holiday Inn do it best.

* Best Western. Browsers can surf Best Western's Web site for programs and promotions, headline news and rates and reservations from South America to the Seychelles.

Bookings can be done on line or through a toll-free number at the site.

http://www.travelweb.com /thisco/bw/common/bw.html

* Hilton Hotels. HiltonNet enables users to seek out special offers, including one in which HiltonNet members earn 1,000 bonus points for making on-line reservations.

A link asking for feedback allows customers to interact with those who pull the strings at Hilton.

<http://www.hilton.com>

* Holiday Inn. On-line reservations, special discounts for guests over the age of 60 and interactive hotel tours make this one of the more user-friendly Web sites for browsers.

<http://www.holiday-inn.com>

Up in the air

As with hotels, most airlines have a Web site on the World Wide Web.

The following airlines are the most noteworthy of those currently accepting on-line bookings.

* Alaska Air. This was the first U.S. carrier with on-line booking. Reference calendars and easy-to-understand flight schedules make on-line booking a snap.

<http://www.alaska-air.com>

* American Airlines. Web users can buy a ticket, change a reservation, check flight status, participate in a cyber-auction or earn 500 bonus AAdvantage miles for booking on line.

<http://www.americanair.com>

* British Midland. The U.K.'s second-largest scheduled airline was the first in the world to take on-line bookings.

The carrier has developed a program called CyberSeat, to enable customers to check current fares and seat availability, as well as to make bookings on line.

<http://www.iflybritishmidland.com>

* Southwest Airlines. Southwest, which had one of the first airline Web sites, has added on-line booking and completes the process in about the same amount of time as the average telephone reservation. On-line booking of electronic tickets is confirmed with an instant fax.

<http://www.iflyswa.com>

Doing your homework

Everyone knows: Before you book, you must look and look and look.

When it comes to trips, what you put in is what you (or your clients) get out. Although these Web sites do not offer on-line booking, they do provide a wealth of travel-related information that you can use.

* Biztravel.com lists special offers, business news, travel alerts and frequent flyer news for business travelers. Also available is access to extensive destination information, including hotels, restaurants, airport diagrams, street maps and driving directions for about 100 cities around the world.

<http://www.biztravel.com>

* Conde Nast Traveler. Conde Nast Traveler is on line with a pile of travel information. The site contains a listing of more than 1,000 properties worldwide.

<http://www.cntraveler.com>

* Fodor's. One of the most recognizable brand names in travel can offer you invaluable hotel and restaurant information or help you create a free personal trip planner -- tailored specifically to your needs.

<http://www.fodors.com>

* Inns and Outs. Quaint is not the best word to describe this Web site. Massive may be more accurate. More than 15,000 North American bed and breakfasts are listed at this user-friendly site.

<http://www.innsandouts.com>

Resorts OnLine. Golf, ski, scuba spa, beach, safari -- just click on the type of resort that interests you, and away you go. The site contains all the information you could want about themed resorts worldwide.

An Excite search engine performs the arduous task.

* Xerox Parc Map Viewer. Where in the world do you think you're going? This Web site will undoubtedly have the answer, and probably in much more specific detail than browsers were looking for in the first place.

ABSTRACT: Electronic Travel Auction, based in Long Beach, CA, will introduce on Jan 6, 1997, a World Wide Web site that will permit bidding for travel products such as hotel rooms, airline seats and cruise bookings. Tour operators can offer excess products via this online auction service. Separate online auction lines will be available for travel professionals and consumers. The service is supported by eBay, based in San Jose, CA.

TEXT:

LONG BEACH, Calif. - Electronic Travel Auction, based here, said it plans to open a Web site Jan. 6 through which consumers and agents can bid for air seats, hotel rooms, cruise berths. tour packages and other travel products.

The on-line auction service will offer an "open marketplace where demand will determine pricing" and where suppliers can dispose of inventory that otherwise would go unsold, ETA said.

According to Mark Hawkins, ETA president, the site will have one auction marketplace for the travel industry only and another for the public.

The industry section, for example, could accommodate wholesalers and other suppliers, such as airlines and hotels, that prefer to deal with agents rather than with the general public.

ETA will be mainly consumer oriented, but agents can make bids and repackage products for resale to their customers, Hawkins said.

"We want to include the travel agency community," he said.

Hawkins said ETA has signed one major hotel company, some airlines, rental car companies and "myriad" other suppliers to participate, but he declined to name them, citing nondisclosure agreements.

Hawkins added that he is in "heavy conversations" with major cruise lines to secure agreements.

ETA plans to begin beta testing the service on Nov. 25.

The Web address will be <http://www.etauction.com>.

Visitors to the site will be able to search a database to generate a list of auctions relevant to their travel plans.

A search could pull up, for example, an opportunity to bid on a time-share condominium in Orlando, another for a vacation package and a third for bargain air fares.

In order to ensure that bidders are "real people" and to avoid having the works gummed up with frivolous bids, ETA will require consumers to input a credit card number when they want to make an offer in a particular auction.

"We want to lower the risk of having people put in bids (that they) don't intend on following up," Hawkins said.

Hawkins is a veteran of two pioneers in the interactive travel booking industry: Travelogix Online of Austin, Texas, and Internet Travel Network of Palo Alto, Calif.

He said ETA is not a competitor of Internet booking services such ITN, Expedia and Travelocity.

"We have nothing to do with (global distribution systems)," Hawkins said.

With ETA, some participating suppliers might opt to have agents handle bookings for the winning bidders; others will deal directly with consumers by telephone or E-mail, and some may establish electronic links to send bidders directly to their service desks, Hawkins said.

He said ETA will generate revenues through monthly "insertion fees" that enable suppliers to host unlimited auctions, and, in each auction, the winning bidder will pay a 10% premium.

The technological foundation for ETA is being provided by eBay, a San Jose, Calif.-based company that in 1995 introduced an Internet service called AuctionWeb through which people can bid for goods.

For more information about the beta test or the site, contact ETA at (310) 997-9193 or auction@infofree.com.

TEXT:

BOSTON -- Few companies are making money on the Internet except Amazon.com Books. This is perhaps the best way to sum up the "Technology Management Forum," held last week by Forrester Research Inc., a technology market research company in Cambridge, Mass.

About 650 information technology executives gathered here last week to learn more about making money on the Internet, the theme for this year's conference. The problem is, not many people are making money on the Internet.

But they sure are spending a lot of money on it, as best exemplified by Steve Ballmer, Microsoft Corp.'s vice president of sales and marketing, who disclosed at the conference that his company will spend between $300 million and $400 million a year for the next few years on developing interactive content. The company doesn't expect to reach a break-even point for three to four years on its content investments, which include MSNBC, a 24-hour news joint venture with NBC, the Microsoft Network, an Internet access and content provider, and Microsoft Expedia, an online travel -booking service.

"It's a long-term play, but we believe in Internet applications," Ballmer said.

Cyberseers do expect people to make money through interactive media soon. Forrester's analysts predict the interactive market will grow twenty-fold in four years, from $10 billion this year to $196 billion by 2000. Much of that activity ($66 billion) will be business- to-business purchases, as companies devise ways of using relatively inexpensive Internet technology in place of electronic data interchange (EDI) technology.

The predicted growth will be driven by the increasing number of companies that build sites offering secure transaction ability.

Most sites nowadays are nothing more than catalogs or brochures featuring a company's financial highlights, history and "corporate vision," but they do not always add any real value to a company's operations.

One Forrester analyst described this discrepancy as the "Internet commerce maturity gap," the difference between a web site effort and a commerce site effort. A commerce site is has all the features of other sales channels, including secure transactions, but it is open 24 hours a day and contains more information about product features.

"There are fewer than 10 great commerce sites on the Internet," said Stan Dolberg, a software strategy analyst at Forrester. He put the sites of Amazon.com Books (a Forrester favorite), Virtual Vineyards, Wells Fargo and Schwab Corp. on his short list of great commerce sites.

Site Profiles

Dolberg said there are two basic strategies for entering online commerce, which basically vary by how much money a company wants to spend.

The conservative strategy costs anywhere from $10,000 to several hundred thousand dollars. At the very least, that range of spending will furnish a company with an "electronic catalog" that allows users to shop for products and place an order through an off-line channel. These kinds of sites can be built with electronic commerce software now on the market.

The aggressive strategy costs in the millions of dollars. This range of spending will produce a site that is interactive, transactional and may be dynamically customized to individual user needs. These sites are built with electronic commerce software and the work of web developers who can integrate a web site with a company's back-end accounting and database systems.

Dolberg said that this kind of site is hard to find on the web. He said IBM Corp. is working with L.L. Bean, the clothing cataloger in Freeport, Maine, to develop a more fully functional site.

Internet Cost-Savings

Although success stories about making money on the Internet are few, several companies are developing ways to use the Internet to make sales and marketing channels more efficient.

GE Information Services (GEIS), the information technology unit of General Electric Corp., said its market research indicates that the primary reason to use the Internet is to control distribution costs. The issue is especially important to GE, which purchases between $50 billion and $60 billion a year in materials for its various units. It expects to purchase $1 billion in goods through the Internet during a 12-month period ending in April.

"We want to reduce the time of materials in distribution centers from three days to three hours," said Harvey F. Seegers, president and CEO of GEIS.

He said Internet technologies will allow buyers and sellers to find each other more quickly and free up time for other tasks.

"Many of the people we talk to say that too much of their time is tied to administrative tasks," Seegers said, "while they're not spending enough time with customers."

Jim Manzi, the former Lotus head who is now president and CEO of Nets Inc., a startup network developer that is attempting to create an electronic marketplace, Industry.Net, to help match buyers and sellers. The task is daunting, he admits, given the special needs of various industry groups.

"Developing a successful Internet business model is extremely hard work," Manzi said. "No one has perfected it. Stan Dolberg, Forrester, 617/520-5809, sdolberg@forrester.com; Harvey F.
